Senior Vice President: Marna Whittington

Friday the Executive Committee of Trustees unanimously elected Dr. Marna C. Whittington as Senior Vice President of the University.

Dr. Whittington, who has been vice president for finance since 1984, has been serving as acting senior vice president since shortly after the death of Mrs. Helen O’Bannon October 19.

"Marna brings a wealth of experience to the position," said President Sheldon Hackney. "The University is fortunate that we can call upon someone who will assume the senior vice presidency with a strong working knowledge of the campus and our community, and a real commitment to its academic mission.

"She is an unusually creative manager who has a rare knack for getting people to work together even in contentious situations," he continued. "She comes into the senior vice presidency with the strong support of faculty and student leaders as well as of the trustees."

Dr. Whittington came to Penn after holding three positions in Delaware's state government—Secretary of Administrative Services 1981-82, Budget Director 1982-83, and Secretary of Finance 1983-84. A graduate of the University of Delaware with M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in quantitative methods from Pittsburgh, Dr. Whittington worked with planning agencies in Philadelphia prior to entering Delaware state government.

Other Actions/Information: The Executive Committee of Trustees also gave the annual authorization to award honorary degrees and passed other motions including those which:

- Set up a Board of Associate Alumni Trustees for Southern California, modeled on the successful experimental one created for the Northeast Region in 1985.
- Establish the new faculty category of Visiting Executive Professor in the Wharton School. (See text of resolution, page 7.)
- Authorized major research improvement expenses for: the completion of shielded space at 3401 Walnut Street for cognitive sciences and the computer science department of SEAS; the renovation of lab space in Towne Building for chemical engineering's advanced technologies research; and the purchase of a positron scanner for radiology at the Medical School.
- President Sheldon Hackney briefed the trustees on the Alcohol Policy and related dissent, scheduled for debate at Council on Wednesday. He also recorded the University's congratulations to Women's Field Hockey (fourth in nationals) and Penn Football (which shares the 1988 Ivy title with Cornell).

Searches: On behalf of Provost Michael Aiken, Deputy Provost Richard Clelland reported on deans' searches in Medicine, Dental Medicine and the Annenberg School—the latter search to have a new committee. He added that an Acting Vice Provost for Computing will be chosen shortly, and that in the meantime units that have been reporting to Dr. David Stonehill will report to Glen Stine, executive director of resource planning and budget. Dr. Clelland also briefed trustees on the establishment of new programs—a graduate group in social welfare based in the School of Social Work, a dual-degree program on energy to be based in Paris, and a Wharton center for advanced study in management.

Back to Classroom: In a letter to President Sheldon Hackney (page 2), Law School Dean Robert Mundheim said he will end his deanship after seven years, returning to full-time faculty status.

Dean Mundheim's Decision: Leaving the Law Deanship After Seven Years

Following is the text of Dean Mundheim's December 11 letter to the President.

Dear Sheldon:

As you asked, I have given further thought to our conversation last spring in which I indicated my hope to resume a full-time role as a professor when my term as dean expires. By the end of this coming February I will have served for seven years, more time than I had originally indicated I expected to serve. I very much appreciate your asking me whether I would be willing to serve an additional period of time.

There are strong personal reasons for my not taking on an additional, full term as dean. More importantly, I think the time is ripe to find new leadership which will be able to consolidate and extend the significant strides the Law school has made in reasserting a leadership role in legal education.

Your support and active help have made my deanship a great personal pleasure and a period of achievement at the Law school. Of the 30 regular, standing faculty now at the School, 18 have been appointed since last 1981. Although the Law School must do some additional faculty building, I am convinced that we have gathered together a strong group whose distinction will increase as they spend more time in the profession. I can already tell you that the Law School faculty has not had a higher level of scholarly productivity than since I joined in 1965.

The Law School has launched a number of new intellectual enterprises which carry great promise of enhancing the School's reputation.

The institute of Law and Economics is a splendid model of an effort which spans traditional school lines. Our most recent venture, the Center on Professionalism, has already received national recognition and enjoys strong support in the Philadelphia legal community. The Center's concern for the public responsibility of lawyers brings the Law School back to a theme for which it has traditionally served as a national leader.

The Law School has also developed a Five Year Plan which maps out the directions in which the Law School constituents agree we should be moving in the future. In addition, the Law School has created a solid structure for assuming its financial health. With the news that the Pew Charitable Trusts have informed the University of their intent to award a $3 million challenge grant to assist with the construction of the new Law School building, we are well along the way toward securing the cash and commitments for the capital campaign contemplated by our Five Year Plan. Indeed, I hope that by the time the University officially launches its capital campaign in the fall, the Law School will be able to report that it has cash and commitments exceeding 40% of its goal.

In short, the Law School seems to be in solid shape and heading in the right direction. The University, of which the Law School feels very much a part, is enjoying a period of great vitality and glowing reputation. Given this context, we have a splendid opportunity to attract strong leadership to the Law School. Leadership committed to the Law School for a significant period of time will be critical to completing the capital fund raising and to cementing the Law School's position of academic leadership.

You did me a great honor by asking me to serve as dean of the Law school. I have enjoyed it enormously. You, Tom and Mike have been superb colleagues and the team of deans you have assembled are a strong closely knit and supportive group. I am, of course, sad to see a period of my life which I cherish beyond any other draw to a close. But, I also look forward to a period of great success for the University and the Law School.

—Robert H. Mundheim
From the President

After consultation at University Council in November, the President has issued the following revised charge, which supersedes that published on November 8. Full membership of the Committee chaired by Dr. Drew Faust will be appointed later this week.

Committee on University Life: The Revised Charge

Penn is an extraordinary community, bringing together more than 35,000 faculty, staff and students from across our nation as well as from 115 countries throughout the world. While our backgrounds and cultural experiences may differ, we are bound together by our shared commitment to the principled pursuit and application of knowledge in a multicultural and interdependent world. As an academic institution, it is vital that we create and maintain a campus atmosphere that is conducive to the free and vigorous exchange of ideas not only in the classroom but also throughout the living and working environment that all of us share. To meet this most compelling responsibility, we need constantly to strive to improve the ways in which students, faculty and staff relate to each other.

One of our principles is that Penn must provide an atmosphere of learning and living in which civility prevails. A university must seek to create an environment in which people treat each other with respect and consideration, regardless of their differences. Penn must find ways to foster a climate of caring, cooperation, and industry. The University's commitment to civility must extend to every member of the community; all students, faculty and staff must treat each other and the public with consideration and appreciation.

Another principle is that education must take place both inside and outside the classroom. Issues of universal importance can often be explored best in settings outside the formal classroom, laboratory, or library—issues relating to ethics and personal values, academic integrity, and the relationship of the individual to the community. A warm and supportive environment throughout the University can play an important role in promoting mutual trust and the candid exchange of ideas. Penn must create greater opportunities for frequent interaction among faculty, staff, and students outside the formal learning environment.

As a residential campus, we have a particular opportunity to provide such an atmosphere for students throughout the University. While residential programs are not the only means of stimulating community dialogue beyond the classroom, they represent an important area of potential interaction. Fifteen years ago, the Report on University Life by the Joint Subcommittee of the Committee of Student Affairs—the "Mendelson Report"—argued that residential programs provide opportunities for students "to learn well and informally the day to day realities of inquiry, rigorous dialogue and intellectual concern." Today, the University community continues to foster living-learning programs that, by encouraging the life of the mind, contribute effectively to the intellectual life of the institution. These programs should now be examined to ensure that they are as effective as possible. We need to ask: What has Penn learned over the last 15 years? How can our living-learning programs better reinforce standards of excellence to which we all must aspire?

A third principle is that the University should celebrate the diversity of its members—faculty, students, staff, and alumni/ae. We need to build connections that encourage all members of the Penn community to reach their full potential. Penn's faculty, staff, and students must work together towards the goals that unite us all: the pursuit of knowledge and truth in an atmosphere of freedom and intellectual integrity. Our challenge is to create an atmosphere in which high behavioral standards are a natural consequence of shared views about each other's intrinsic worth as human beings. To work towards this goal we need to consider some difficult, but essential questions: what is the current state of relations among different groups at Penn? How can these relations be improved? How do inter-group relations affect our ability to work towards our shared goals?

To address these and other issues that are central to creating a strong and vital university life, I am establishing a distinguished committee of Penn faculty, students, staff, and alumni, chaired by Dr. Drew Faust, the Stanley I. Sheerr Professor of American Civilization. Specifically, I am asking the Committee to consider the following questions:

1. What should Penn's goal be with regard to life on our campus outside the classroom? What principles should guide Penn's programs in the area of University life?

2. How can Penn foster greater civility among all groups and individuals on campus?

3. In what ways can the University foster greater interaction among faculty, staff, and students outside the classroom? What kinds of incentives can Penn provide to faculty to promote such exchanges at the undergraduate and graduate levels? What roles should the living-learning programs play in strengthening Penn's undergraduate experience? How should residential living contribute to the intellectual life of the institution? What roles should fraternities and sororities play on campus?

4. How can the University respond to issues of concern to diverse groups, in particular, student groups? How can Penn help build connections among members of these groups? What can the Office of Student Life do to help members of different races, nationalities, genders, religions, and sexual preferences interact with each other in supportive and constructive ways?

5. As a major urban institution, what are Penn's special responsibilities and creative opportunities, particularly in the Greater Philadelphia community?

I look forward to a report from the Committee on these issues in the spring of 1989. This report should provide a basis to inform all aspects of our life at Penn and should serve, most immediately, as the basis for the five-year plan to be developed under the leadership of the new Vice Provost for University Life.

January at Penn

Services to Students was composed without contact with either the M.S.A. or the Muslim community. Although it claims to "concentrate on the established groups" with the intent "to raise issues that might warrant a more thorough examination," in fact it articulates those issues in relation to small religious communities such as ours. The report consists of a dubious statistical presentation, unbalanced reviews of the three "established" foundations, and an alarmist analysis of University resources (in funds or space) allocated to non-established groups. All members of the various Penn religious communities should be alarmed, not by the Subcommittee's findings, but by its implicit biases.

Specifically, the numerical data adduced is incomplete, marginally accurate, and uninterpretable beyond the simplistic observation of religious diversity. Instead of addressing the question of whether diversity is being properly served, the report instead portrays the services offered by the three major religious foundations. We learn, among other things, that Hillel sponsorship is not strictly religious, but "communal," and that the Christian Association has anti-Semitic tendencies. The report asserts that none of the foundations has ties to the administration, but still notes examples of their being built on University property, or of receiving funds in the form of rent from University units. The budgets and full resources of these foundations are unknown to us, but they are compared implicitly to that of the M.S.A., whose campus profile is "paradoxical" to the Subcommittee. The report erroneously describes the SAC subvention of Minister Farrakhan's visit as a religious activity sponsored by the Nation of Islam, as if the latter organization were a recognized student group. It has never been. Farrakhan was invited to Penn by a consortium of groups, but M.S.A. and other religiously oriented organizations were not among them. The skew of the report calls seriously into question the motives and impartiality of the Subcommittee.

M.S.A. activities are open to the entire University community and are announced regularly in the DP. Among them are a weekly communal prayer, a Saturday evening social gathering and discussion circle, a twice-annual reception, and nightly dinners during the Islamic month of Ramadan. We have a large and active core of dues-paying members, who produce a monthly newsletter, organize athletic activities, and embark on occasional outings. We have our own library and a book and cassette distribution service. We regularly conduct unpublicized, in-house fundraisers for relief causes such as in Afghanistan, Sudan, and Bangladesh. A tutoring program is being established for Philadelphia area Muslim high school students. If our members seem few and inactive to the Subcommittee, it is primarily due to the discriminatory atmosphere in which Muslims find themselves here at Penn, an atmosphere that thickened last February during an incident cited in the separate COE report, when Muslim members of Grass Roots International, a relief organization working on that occasion on behalf of recently renered Palestinians, participated in a Locust Walk fundraiser by the explicit sufferance of Hillel's director, provided they expressed no "political" message (DP 2/19/88).

M.S.A., like many religious groups in America, is reassessing its public political stance, and is learning to be more assertive about its longstanding support of causes like that of Muslim Palestine. If we become more openly political (or "communal"), rather than 'strictly religious”), will we better deserve University support in the view of the Subcommittee? For now, our activities are conducted in rooms which we must request monthly and without guarantee of availability, from the Houston Hall Board. We have a Houston Hall mailbox and a dingy Irvine Auditorium office, which we share with an infestation of mice. For a building or empty lot on Locust Walk, we would trade all this, and gladly sweeten the deal with $600.

A Statement and a Proposal from the Interfaith Council

As representatives to the university of major religious denominations in America, we would like to comment on the racial, ethnic and anti-semitic outrages which have recently occurred.

We begin with the assumption that all of us are children of God, created in God's image, by our very being entitled to respect and dignity. It is this article of faith, the significance of every human being, that informs our work.

We live in a neighborhood and in a campus community where people of many faiths, races, and ethnic origins mingle. Yet in this atmosphere, where we strive to affirm diversity and preach not only tolerance but a pluralism that is valuable and exciting, we are visited by manifestations of hate which sprays swastikas and racial insults on campus walls. It is within that context that each of us ought to reaffirm the dignity of all, the value of a pluralistic society and the importance of a shared community. But more importantly we ought to take concrete steps to move the campus in that direction.

Toward these ends we are committed to:

1. Establishing a program grant from the Interfaith Council of up to $2,000 for student-initiated programs on campus that deal with racial, ethnic, sexual, and religious sensitivities.

2. Opening our centers to workshops, discussions, and seminars on racial, ethnic, religious, and sexual sensitivities.

3. Working on inter-faith and inter-ethnic projects, and inviting all others to work with us on similar questions.

4. Providing frequent opportunities for prayer and meditation on issues of intergroup sensitivity.

5. Working with University committees on the issues that face us.

The memory of Cyril Leung and Meera Ananthakrishnan and the well-being of all Penn students who have been physically or psychologically harmed requires our concerted attention to deal with this problem.

“Buy West” Update
To prevent any misunderstanding regarding the University’s progress as a partner in the “Buy West Philadelphia” campaign, I would like to correct the figures shown in the December 6, 1988 Almanac.

In fiscal year 1986, University purchases from local providers amounted to $1.3 million.

In fiscal year 1987, the amount increased to $2.07 million (up 59%), and in fiscal year 1988, the total reached $3.7 million (up 79%).

Resolution on the Establishment of a New Faculty Category of Visiting Executive Professor in the Wharton School

Passed by the Executive Committee of the Trustees on December 9, 1988

Intention
The Wharton School has proposed the establishment of five non-tenured full professorships in its associated faculty carrying the title “Visiting Executive Professor.” Its proposal has been supported by the Senate Executive Committee and approved by the provost. Appointments will carry terms of up to five years. In no case, however, shall any individual serve as Visiting Executive Professor for more than five years.

Frequently the Wharton School is in a position to attract outstanding business or governmental leaders for several years. These would be senior business persons who will have spent most or all of their careers in the business world and/or in government services. They will have achieved prominence in their organizations, typically being chief executives or chief operating officers or principals in their companies or high cabinet officers, legislators, executive or judicial officers in government. This situation develops when individuals are either in a transition between major leadership positions or near conclusion of a professional leadership career and desire an active few years to transmit their knowledge and experience gained prior to coming to the University of Pennsylvania. In the latter case, individuals will often be between 55 and 65 years of age and can look forward to a period of active productive teaching of the significant management knowledge they have acquired over their lifetime in business or government. In the former case, career business or governmental leaders are frequently looking for an appropriate environment to collect their thoughts, write a book or papers, interact with students and faculty and build the base for their next career move. These persons would usually be between 40 and 50 years of age and would look forward to one to five years of activity at Wharton before starting another demanding executive career in business or government.

Visiting Executive Professors would be expected not only to impart considerable knowledge and experience to our students but also to function as excellent representatives and role models for careers in industry and government. In addition to teaching, they will be available for counseling of students, interacting with business people and government leaders and for certain executive education activities.

The appointment of a Visiting Executive Professor will include approval by the department, the Wharton Personnel Committee, and the Provost’s Staff Conference. The review shall include consideration of the contributions a candidate for Visiting Executive Professor could make to the intellectual and scholarly life of the school and the University.

No later than five years from now, the provost will review the position of Visiting Executive Professor. This process will include seeking the advice of the Faculty Senate.

Resolved: that effective 9 December 1988, the faculty category of Visiting Executive Professor shall be and hereby is established in the associated faculty of the Wharton School subject to the conditions stated in the preceding paragraphs.
Student Financial Services

Frank Claus, associate vice president of finance, has announced the opening of the Office of Student Financial Services, a convenient, one-stop service for all student financial needs. The Office will provide an array of financial services, products, and counseling in as informative and efficient a manner as possible.

Located in the Franklin Building, Student Financial Services begins official operation on December 20, consolidating the offices of the Bursar, Financial Aid, Penn Plan, and Collections (these offices will be closed December 19—move-in day). Student Financial Services will also include the new Student Financial Information Center, most likely to be the only place a student will have to visit in order to solve financial problems.

More Holiday Hours

The University Cashier's Office will be open 10 a.m. - 12:45 p.m. Tuesday, December 27 through Friday, December 30.
