New Spring Exhibits

meta Metasequoia Morris Arboretum, April 30-Ongoing

Photos courtesy Morris Arboretum

A canopy into the limbs of the Metasequoias is the latest addition to the Morris Arboretum experience. A stairway brings visitors front and center into one of the Arboretum's most spectacular groves of trees via an installation called meta Metasequoia. Once aloft, a viewing basket provides an open-air room big enough to sit in, allowing visitors to linger within the branches and feel the childhood wonder of seeing the world from above. Adults and children alike will rekindle the feeling of wonder by experiencing the majestic Metasequoias from a new, more intimate perspective.

Connecting Cultures: Kids Across The World Penn Museum, May 6-November 26

On May 6, Penn Museum opens a new exhibition, Connecting Cultures: Kids Across The World. Award-winning photojournalist Joan S. Klatchko has spent the last 15 years traveling from Cambodia to Australia, from the Galapagos Islands to Uganda, in a photographic journey, not just to document cultural differences, but to explore the similarities that connect kids, cultures and countries across the world. This exhibition of her photographs, plus edited video from some of her travels, features images of children, their families and friends organized by universal themes including play, education, healthcare, protection and family. Connecting Cultures links images of suburban American kids, Vietnamese refugees, Tibetan novice monks, Cambodian land-mine victims, Ugandan AIDS orphans, children of Borneo rainforest tribes, and Andean mountain dwellers in a way that celebrates the fundamental commonalities that connect all kids, from all cultures, across the world. 1st floor Merle Smith Gallery, Penn Museum. Through November 26, 2006.
