Bankruptcy as Implicit Health Insurance

Tues., Feb. 1, 2011; 3:00 PM – 4:30 PM
1201 Steinberg Hall-Dietrich Hall

Light Refreshments Will Be Offered.

Neale Mahoney is a Ph.D. candidate in economics at Stanford University. His primary research interest is health insurance markets. His job market paper is on the implicit insurance that households receive from the ability to declare bankruptcy. He has also studied the fiscal externality that a form of supplemental insurance called Medigap imposes on Medicare and the welfare consequences of community-rating regulations in health insurance markets.
