Doug Wholey is a professor of organizations and management at the School of Public Health at the University of Minnesota. His current research focuses on professional work, particularly in inter-professional teams that provide services for disadvantaged individuals or individuals with chronic conditions and primary care clinics. He has studied the social structure of markets, managed care markets and organizations, public health systems, social service and health networks, information systems, and software teams. His teaching focuses on management, particularly lean management, problem solving, and social networks, and information management. He earned his MBA and PhD from the Haas School of Business Administration.
