Celebrating Scientific Innovation: Penn Opens the IAST with a Reception and Open House

The Roy & Diana Velagatos Laboratories of the IAST

From early experiments with electricity to today’s pioneering work in gene therapy, the Roy & Diana Velagatos Laboratories of the Institute for Advanced Science and Technology (IAST) will serve as a new hub for discovery and innovation. These Laboratories are a part of a multi-year, multi-disciplinary initiative to build toward a new, world-class research campus on 34th Street and Smith Walk. The opening of these Laboratories marks a significant milestone in the growth and development of IAST and is the first step toward realizing the vision of a world-class research campus for the nation and the world, providing the space and scientific and technological discovery and the cultural advancement upon which they feed.

Postdoctoral, graduate, and undergraduate students will have expanded introductory research opportunities in these new laboratories. They will work with state-of-the-art equipment using the most modern methods and techniques. They will also have increased access to the senior research faculty and the major research projects in the IAST. As a training ground for young scientific researchers, the Laboratories are the first step toward realizing the dream of the Velagatos family through The Roy & Diana Velagatos Laboratories—to launch tomorrow’s research today.
