I like all beginnings: the first sentence of a book, the first robin in spring, the first whiff of an autumn bonfire, the first words of a play, and the first sip of an old wine (and also the second and third).

— C[harles] Lee,
An Almanac of Reading,
(New York: Coward McCann, p. 5).